Omon Bay.-A Walk Inland.

aving the mission, for a few rods you walk he rolling stones of the beach, pass a few ises on the right-then enter the path, narrow, alled in on either side, and thick set by weeds and low bushes, from which the frightened snort of running hogs comes startlingly near your very eet. The whole land seems divided into small nelosures by stone walls, some of which are very eatly laid, but seldom, however, reaching above e waist. These enclosures have this peculiarity -if the wall is built by women, they are common o all, but if by men, they are tabu; no women an cut across-they must go around them. Kekela tells us that every possession of land is listinctly marked. To own a quarter of an acre is to be an independent chief, and entitles the wner to wear the insignia of rank-these are the nklet, a clump of black feathers braided on coanut cord, and the ivory jewels which puff out holes a good sized gimblet might have bored in the ear of the lusty fellow who stops to look at the strangers. The Omoan, from the manner he throws out his ancles, and feels of his ears, is evidently proud of his ornaments. Why not? they are his gems-the only diamonds he poss. He admires them, and thinks we must He seems proud of the variegated tattoo hich makes head, face and body look like a dscape garden, so beautifully is it marked off, which, say on the small of his back, we can see represented several porpoists, and a shark or hale sporting. Why should'nt he be proud? his wealth. It costs the Marquesan a little tattoo no Marquesan lass would marry him.

"That," says Kekela, pointing out a large, strong framed building which, though incomplete, was nevertheless the best we raw in the islands, "That is the house we were building on Makounui's land for the mission when he drove us off by his ill treatment. (Makounui is the chief who came to Honolulu for missionaries.) Our wives brought those pebbles. We brought those stones from the beach. Mr. Bicknell and ourselves cut and hewed the timber, set up the frame and put on the roof. We split the bamboo and put on the lattice work." It looked desolate. Passing on a few steps we enter, without knocking, the house of the celebrated tabu chief, Makonnui. We are surprised. Nothing here comports with the dignity of the greatest chief of the island. The building is fashioned after the Hawaiian model, but is nowhere complete. The stones on the floor would be hardly less roughly laid had they been tumbled together by a "Roaring Brook." A bed-place, in the Marquesan style, is at the farther end, but its comforts consist in a single mat and a dirty roll of tapa-nothing rore. On this the great man lies, and quite as indifferent as if he had never seen civilization. Hardly wonderful, since many white men on the island wear Adam's everyday clothing-some out of choice, some because they have not got any civilised trousers. We were received with dignity, addressed in broken English, and were shown by him his proficiency in writing. Two of his four wives were in the house-of these four, two were enticed and stolen from their husbands on Hivaca. This was the only case of polygamy we heard of in the islands. The female of rank has the privilege of husbands ad libitum, according to her fancy. We ward of a dandyhusband, a fisherman-husband, and a cook-husband—the perquisites of one female. Hardly a Imp Mahometan paradise that!

We were walking inland-every step was full of new sights, rousing new ideas, and filling the mind with thoughts enough to fill a book. The bread-fruit trees had leaves double the size of those on Hawaii nei, and though not the season, there still remained much ripe fruit. The cocoanuts were enormous, some containing three pints of milk, and then we often met trees which had upwards of 250 nuts hanging on them. Their trunks were so long and slender that they resembled a stem rather than a trunk. There were strange trees, of a species never seen by us before, and occasionally strange birds flew out of the thick foliage. There were tall banana stalks, of the Tahitian species, supporting huge bunches of green fruit. There were native houses raised by four posts, 34 feet from the ground, common to males alone, but tabu for all females. There were sacred spots where the spirits of ancestors impose the spell of death on the violator of their hallowed ground. There were hulahula places (dancing grounds), one ornamented by eyeless skulls. An interesting chapter might be written about these alone. There was a pali (precipice) which is still the haunt of their spirits. The houses of the natives were very peculiar, the back coming down from the ridge-pole like the back of a capital letter A. The whole house of the where bodies slain in war were most simple construction, sometimes four upright posts about 15 feet high, in the middle. In a groove at the top rests the ridge-pole, three or four rafters on the back side reach to the ground, the same number on the front come within three feet, and then rest on a beam which forms the only cave to the house—every side is thatched with either bread-fruit leaves strung on bamboo, or braided excoanut leaves tied on by bark strings to the more than the strings to the more than the strings to the strings. to the rafters. The houses were invariably elevated above the ground upon a leveled pavement of stones; the inside was never more than eight or nine feet wide, varying according to the wealth of the proprietor, to twenty-five or thirty feet in length; the bed-place was sunk six inches below the floor of the building, not quite half the length of a French bedstead, and extended on the back of the house; that part of the body of the sleeper called the trunk alone rested in it, while the feet and legs six inches higher than the rest of the dy were extended on the pavement of storich ranke a smooth, cool floor for the bo There were numerous other peculiarities, but they cannot be enumerated here. Word came which called Kekela and party to propare for sailing, and again closely inspecting all that was new and strange, we returned slowly to the mission.

Agricultural Imp PLEASE READ.—Having erected a good day facilities not heretofore possessed by any in this stormanufacturing Agricultural Implements, I beg leave to amouth at I am now properly under way with that business. I ploy none but the best and most experienced mechanics work no material but the best. In this way I hope to promote interest of the good mechanic, the interest of the good mechanic, the interest of the same time that interest which is foremost with all mankind. I have had twenty years' experience in the manufacturing a nees; I established the first shop, and made the first sted in the State of Wisconsin, in the dawn of her day of most cultural improvement. I also made the first Reaping and ing machine, and the first steel plow ever made it his Therefore, with my experience and a knowledge of the variable country, (which are different from most extens) I have dent that I can and will do much for the interest of the country and in my afform I trust I shall with a good share of patronage from the farmer, and all is ested in this matter, and in the interest and development of agricultural improvement of our State.
